PEACE APPEALS MADE BY MANY - PUBLIC GROUPS

Arbitration of the Mexican Issue Asked by Labor, Teachers, and Churches

JUDICIAL METHOD TERMED SUITABLE

Professors of International Law Urge Immediate Effort for Settlement

Special from Monitor Bureau WASHINGTON, Jan. 24-With no new step taken either by the Government of the United States or Mexico toward settling the controversy arising over the Mexican oil and land laws, private parties have taken the initiative in urging that an attempt be made to seek a basis of understanding, and that in case of continued failure to agree, the nations resort to mediation. While official comment has not been forthcoming, the continued bombard-ment of the capital with petitions urging arbitration has had an effect on officials, and such petitions show no sign of diminishing. Following the lead of the Federal Council of Churches in America supporting arbitration, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and a college group listing 101 pro-fessors, have now added their weight to the proposals, expressed in sepa-rate statements.

Speaking for American Labor, Mr. Green urges that Mexico has the right to determine the "constitutionality" of its own laws, but that over disputes as to feet with other condisputes as to fact with other coun-tries on such laws recourse should be had to an arbitral tribunal.

"A Justifiable Question" The college professors, on their root of the difficulty lies a clearly its last meeting, formally approved a ceptional earning ability. Statements issued at the White House make it plain that President Coolidge feels the American public does not understand the issues pend-ing in the present dispute, but judging from the tone of petitions re-relived in Washington since the af-fair reached a critical stage there seems clear indication that a ma-jority of the American people desire resort to the orderly processes of International arbitration

RHODE ISLAND COAL AGAIN TO BE MINED

CRANSTON, R. I., Jan. 24 (Special) -- Mining of Rhode Island coal attempted numerous times in fuel emergencies, is to be revived. The new venture hinges on the perfection of a process which its sponsors say has been found practical. By this process the coal is pulverized and the most combustible particles reassembled and baked together with an oil binder. The objection to native anthracite has been that it was too hard to burn, but Henry F. Maurel, a mining engineer who directing the enterprise, says the objection has been overcome

Mob Violence Renewed;

India to Share Reparations LONDON, Jan. 24 (A)-Renewed mob violence broke out in Hankow on Friday. Dispatches received today say Chinese crowds attacked the customs building, where Sir Francis Agien, Inspector-General of Maritime customs, was conferring with the Finance Minister of the Cantonese Government, Mr. Soong. The crowds invaded the corridors and attacked Mr. Soong's bodyguard but were fin-ally dispersed by Cantonese troops. Officials here say the inference is that Chinese extremists were agitat-ing against Mr. Soong negotiating with foreign officials. The affair is also regarded as indicating the diffi-culties confronting Eugene Chen, Cantonese Foreign Minister, in his efforts to control the radical element among the Cantonese. Resumption of business in Hankow y the British bankers and merchants shows that the general posttion in the city is improving, al-though the British Foreign Office is still without news of definite progress in the conferences between Mr.

O'Malley and Mr. Chen. The Foreign Office sums up the general situation in China as "no better, and no worse." There is no confirmation of the report that the Cantonese have launched a new drive against Shanghai and advices re-ceived here indicate that the reverses reported to have been suf-fered by Gen. Maintenance of American Marines Is Defended

Special from Manitor Bureau CHICAGO, Jan. 24-Replying vigorously to a Chinese editor's deprecation of American marines in China, Silas Strawn, one of the two American delegates to the recent Chinese customs conference and chairman of the extra-territoriality commission, warmly defended the maintenance of American guards, any other nation to lock horns with China." he said. "American guards are there in a deferential and re-spectful way to protect our citizens from mob violence. I cannot forget that it is the duty of the United States to look after its citizens. We would be the most cowardly and pussilanimous of peoples if we allowed mobs to run over our people and kill them instead of defending them as we have a right to do." them as we have a right to do."

Previously Grover Clark, publisher of the Peking Leader, had told the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, of which Mr. Strawn is president, that soldiers are only an irritation in China.

"Personally I would feel safer," he said, "if there were no American marines in Peking. It is entirely legitimate for the American Government to protect American lives in China, but that protection should be limited to the evacuation of Americans who want to leave. It is not legitimate to land troops to protect American property. If property is destroyed it is proper to ask for damages afterward. It is not proper damages afterward. It is not proper to land troops and protect property at the loss of lives. The British did the wisest thing they ever did in Shanghai when they withdrew their troops and left their property to the protection of the Chinese."

Mr. Strawn declared there was no anti-foreign feeling in China except that stirred up for ulterior motives, and expressed the belief that no

Poster Report Denied

By Wireless from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Jan. 24-The reports cabled from Shanghai to the leading British papers alleging that the National Christian Council of China, of which the Rev. E. C. Lobenstine of America and Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin of England are the secretaries, had issued a poster showing Chinese Christian students 'driving "infidel foreign devils" from China, are officially denied here as war-time propaganda. The same messages also referred to a manifesto said to have been issued by the Wuhan Christian continuation committee which, it was stated, is allied to the council. This ranged the Chinese Christian church definitely against the foreign-

TARIFF THOUGHT WOMEN'S CLUBS PLAN SAFE AT GENEVA

Not Goal for Attack at Economic Conference, Says Boston Man

The United States should take part in the international economic con-ference at Geneva in May, and can lo so without any misgivings as to the attitude of the conference toward the American tarin, believes Henry S. Thompson, a Boston investment banker, who sat in the place of David F. Houston at the second pre-paratory conference last November. Mr. Thompson thinks that for the United States to be represented at the coming conference cannot pos-sibly do any harm and might result in considerable benefit both for the United States and for European na-tions. He is not of the opinion that the United States should enter the League of Nations, but thinks it may well participate as a nonmember. In connection with the impression, which seems to have gained some credence lately, that American tariffs are a potential target for attack in the economic conference, Mr. Thompson said he did not find the sightest preparatory conference. He recalled not one criticism being voiced in the production group conferences against United States duties, and no antagonism apparent.

He believes that the American tariff apprehension has arisen not out of anything that transpired in ference at Geneva.

such discussions as Mr. Thompso heard in Geneva on the subject of tariffs were all on the subject of European tariffs. At one time he heard the United States referred to being the largest free trade area in the world, and the ease of com-merce between units of the United States was contrasted with the stric tures under which international trade operates even within smaller dis tances in Europe.

There is good reason, Mr. Thompson thinks, why European economists and business men should not wish to force a reduction of American duties. Europe seeks someone with buying power as a customer for its products. Highly paid and well-employed American labor, un-der conditions at least partly attributable to tariff protection, he says, provides that buying power and a market for world goods.

The ast three items on the program all bore the notation "first time." This was no doubt accurate in the case of Mr. Slonimsky's songs, but with Roussel and Jongen was it not a little misles ding? Presurably it meant "first time at these concerts." And might not as much have been said of the Brahms? This Trio was easily the high spot

Heritage of Association

The house has been one of the social as well as historic landmarks of its community. Its beautiful gardens, built in the old fashion and filled with flowering shrubs and fruit trees is anually a beauty spot of the section.

In the inevitable transpositions of its neighborhood, business has been brought to its very door and heavy trolley ears and trucks rum-lons of gasoline.

A. W. Hannigan of the Portland Street Garage appeared in opposition to the petition for his garage. He said he spoke for not only his own garage, but for the new North Adminial Garage, the Bowdoin Square Garage, Huntley's Garage in Chardon Street, and the Endicott Street Garage.

FEDERAL DRY AGENTS RAID MALT DEALERS

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 24 (Special)—Federal prohibition agents, holding power which municipal police lack under State law, have begun the seizure of material and equipment sold over counters and intended for the purpose of making illicit liquors. These places are the "mait and hop stores," which recently have taken to selling complete apparatus for brewing and distilling. Four of the stores were raided and "stills" seized after prohibition agents made affidavit that they had agurchased stills in each. Under State law the police may only confiscate the containers in which liquor is found.

Which indicates the possibility of a later slackening in local manufacturing lines, though no real recession is indicated.

This is said to be the first time that any of the larger American universities has so actively recognized the importance of motion pictures. The school authorities consider that as a business school it should introduce into its regular course what has now become one of the half dozen leading industries in the country. The number of persons engaged in it is relatively small, but the motion picture industry is now in close contact with and has an important and affect influence on a large proportion of the public in the United States.

The lectures, dovering all phases of the industry, will be given three times a week in the course in business policy, a required course for all students in their second and final year in the Harvard Business School. These lectures will be given in the Goorge F. Baker, Foundation, and will include the points of view at the distributor, the bankes, the producer and the director.

ACHIEVEMENT WORK RESULTS REPORTED

Junior Clube in Springfield Produce 5556 Articles

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 24 (Special)—Now that Junior Achievement Club work is being extended to new fields, increased interest is felt in the movement. An idea of the growth and scope of the work in the older centers is afforded by the annual report of the Springfield Junior Achievement Foundation, just made public.

Working in 13 different lines of activity, 1562 boys and girls in the last club year produced 5556 approved articles. The cost of materials used totaled $2266. The sum of $1526 was realized from sales terials used totaled $2266. The sum of $1526 was realized from sales and other products to the value of $3637 were reported unsold, many of these being kept by the makers for home use or for gifts. Thus the total value of the articles made is estimated at $5163. In carrying on their work of buying, manufacturing and selling, the young achievers had many problems to solve, financial and otherwise. The work is carried on in the afternoon, after school, and on Saturdays and holidays, and to an increased degree in the summer vacation period.

Tools and equipment are bough borrowed on notes or given by or-ganizations co-operating with the clubs. The cost of the Achievement service is computed at $10 per boy or girl, and in furtherance of the work unit certificates are sold at that price.

BIG LONDON FAIR OUTLOOK BRIGHT

British Manufacturers Taking Opportunity of Showing Activity of Industry

Special from Monitor Bureau LONDON - Britain's rehabilitated trade position, and the energetic moves which British manufacturers are making to regain, expand, and hold their position in world trade is shown by the great British Industries Fair, to be held in London and Birmingham from Feb. 21 to March 4. So anxious have manufacturers been to place their products before the many thousands of buyers who will be in England for the Fair that all space has been sold and the Fair catalogue issued nearly two months before the opening date.

The London Fair is held in the White. City buildings and occupies upwards of 175,000 square feet of subbition space. The Birmingham section, where the building and hardware enginering, metal and agriculture. ware, enginering, metal and agricul-ture, and lighting and heating exhib-its are shown, occupies 120,000 square feet. The Fair has been widely ad-vertised throughout the world, espe-cially in America and the British Do-minions, and buyers are known to be minions, and buyers are known to be planning to attend from practically every country in the world of any trade importance.

The exhibits at London cover an immense variety of products made in Great Britain. This year the texin Great Britain. This year the textile exhibits are especially note-worthy, being four times as large as last year. Musical instruments, pottery and glassware, sports goods, toys and games, printing and stationery, leather goods, and furniture are only a representative smattering of the many lines to be represented. The chemical industry is one that has been especially successful in Great Britain since the war and the exhibit arranged by the new chemical combine, which embracese the four largest British chemical firms, is most interesting and illuminating.

is most interesting and illuminating.
Artificial silk is another infant industry that has grown to huge proportions almost before the public has realized the fact, and in this line also the leading firms have provided impressive exhibits.

British manufacturers have embraced the opportunity given them by the fair to answer effectively any rumors that British trade has been crippled by the industrial troubles of last year. It is a striking fact that while many firms were compelled to curtail their operations through lack of coal, orders continued to be booked and are now being filled with great rapidity. Many such firms seized the opportunity given by the coal strike to overhaul their plants, arrange new and more up-to-date models of their goods, and in every way prepare themselves for the strong competition of firms in other District Attorney Pays Out countries.

The fair is another proof of a tendency in British industry—the dependence of British manufacturers quality and high-grade goods in place of the cheap, mass-production goods of some other countries. This endency is apparent in the textile ndustry, where British high-quality goods constantly increase their sale. espite high tariffs and other diffi-ulties. The whole tendency, which critish manufacturers have found to he the most dependable one for British industrial genius, has been founded on the well-known individ-ual ability of the British workman, who despises cheapness and shod-

ROM more than one point of view the exhibition of Flemish and Belgian art, in the galieries of the Royal Academy, is the most important display of art treasures that has been seen in England for many years. Indeed, no such assemblage of works by the Flemish primitives has been seen in Europe since the famous "Golden Fleece" exhibition of 1907, and even that is surpassed in range by the present collectors, which covers five centuries approximately, 1400 to 1900. Its value is incalculable, but it has been estimated at £5,000,000 as a minimum.

Further, as Sir Robert, Witt, one of the trustees of the National Gallery, has remarked, it is significant that this exhibition, for the first time since 1914, brings together masterpieces lent by no less than five European governments: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, and Hungary. In addition a valuable group of early langing is lent by Americal acknowledged, and the particular of the first content of the first integrated to first the first having the greater clarity, the second the richer color.

The exhibition consists of nine large galleries devoted to the display of some 400 paintings, two galleries hung with tapestries and also containing sculpture, and two rooms given to drawings and engravings. But the quality of the collection is still more important than the quantity. It is only possible in this arti-cle to mention a few of the out-standing exhibits in each gallery. As far as possible the collection has been arranged chronologically, and the only disadvantage of this method been arranged chronologically, and the only disadvantage of this method is that the Van Eycks and their contemporaries reached the summits of painting at the beginning; so that despite the achievements of later painters, the line of supreme excellence gradually declines the further we progress from the fifteenth century.

The first room maintains the highest level both as regards conception and execution. After a few examples of fourteenth century works by unknown artists, we begin chronologically with Sir Herbert Cook's magnificent Hubert van Eyck, "The Three Maries at the Sepulchre," which is probably the most precious and claim to exact topographical accuracy, qualified judges maintain that it does present the general aspect of the city of Jerusalem as seen from a distance. Whether Hubert himself made the pligrimates is uncertain, but he may well have been provided with sketches made on the spot by a contemporary pilgrim with an aptitude for drawing. In this intensely serious painting a note of light relief is given by the humor with which the fat soldier asleep is painted. This human and humorous touch appears indigenous to northern painting. There is ness of style in his larger works.

Other works in this room are by Petrus Christus, Dieric Bouts and Memlinc, among the last being the Duke of Devonshire's famous triptych, "Madonna and Child With Saints and Donors," in which the wing showing St. John the Evangelist with the poisoned cup deserves the closest attention from connoisseurs. The great "Death of the Virgent Petron of the strength of the Virgent Petron of the Petron of th and humorous touch appears indige-mous to northern painting. There is nothing quite like it in Italian art, and we find it persisting through Flemish painting till it culminates in the rich Shakespearean humor of Much of that monumental feeling and majestic grandeur is also seen in the work of Robert Campin, represented at the Academy only by one picture, "God the Father manifesting the Dead Christ," lent by Louvain. Unfortunately the head of the Deity has obviously been repainted in this work, but the lower half with the two angels is Campin at his best. More to be desired even than the More to be desired even than the It is difficult for me to believe that Ghent polyptych is the altarpiece at the Abbey of Flémalle, near Liège, which caused Campin to be known for years as the "Matter de Flémalle"; no loan from Belgium would be more warmly welcome, but while room Brussels. The first is wonder-great its absence we can console ourselves by the exceptionally the foliage telling as a mass, though rich representation of Campin in the National Gallery.

The rowners was the "Maitre de Flemballer" in the Mirgin and Virgins With Magdalen" from Brussels. The first is wonderful in its perfectly organized detail, the foliage telling as a mass, though each leaf is minutely delineated, but the figures and faces in it are quite differently handled to those in the grown or the figure of the

The younger Van Eyck also is so splendidly represented in Trafalgar Square that we can hardly expect the loans here to add to our knowledge Many of the paintings in this room can be enjoyed as fine works of art typical of their age, but in our present uncertainty about the lesser late fitteenth century masters their at-tribution to particular painters is of this painter. The most precious example at the academy is the "St. Barbara" from Antwerp, in which there is only the first beginning of the painting in a touch of blue in the sky, though the drawing is finished to the last exquisite detail. It is an object lesson to the modern craftsman of the thoroughness with which man of the thoroughness with which Jan Van Eyck prepared his ground before he began to put pigment on his panel, and it conclusively proves his drawing to have been the backbone of his incomparable art. If in elevation of thought Jan did not touch the heights of his brother Hubert or even tion of thought Jan did not touch the heights of his brother Hubert or even of Campin, as an exponent of the eraft of painting he reached a per-fection that has seldom been equalled and never surpassed. Btill more instructive—because

Two aquarelies by Frans Michhorst, "Tyrolean Peasants" and "Girl at a Table," showed all the marks of having been painted with loving care, a quality often lacking in other pictures. Professor Max Liebermann, head of the academy, disappointed this fall, being represented only by a few pencil and pastel sketches. The brushwork of a row of small water colors by Prof. Emil Orlik showing scenes in North Italy was so fine that it almost seemed as if the pictures were drawn with as if the pictures were drawn with colored pencils or with the pen. Frau Prof. Kaethe Kollwits, whose life object is the depicting of scenes among the poor, exhibited five draw-

With equal genius Olaf Guibransson gives expression to the faces in his red chalk portraits by a single whole wall and are eminently strong and decorative. Prof. Hans Poelsig's designs for stage settings filled an entire room. His favorite colors seem to be gold, silver, red and green which he likes to set against a gray background with a tint of green and yellow. With these colors he creates luminous pillars, clouds like the rays of the polar light and foliage dropping in cascades from the sky, thus producing fantastic backgrounds.

Recent Metropolitan Activities

New York, Jan. 31

DURING the last six months the Metropolitan Museum of Arthan staddity gained in its artistic holdings—as if it really mattered to so richly appointed an institution. But even museums have their edacious side, and so the tally mounts month by month with treasures for that, Aside from the actual tale of recent accessions the Metropolitan Museum lists an imposing procession of activities in many fields. Outside the museum proper, work is constantly going on at the Cloisters, with the furthering of certain exterior arrangement; while the museum's Egyptian Exposition reports continued activity in its Theban excavations. Many of the galleries have been reconstructed, following the installation of the magnificent new South Wing, and the rooms formerly occupied by the Altman Collection and the primitive paintings have been thoroughly done Altman Collection and the primitive paintings have been thoroughly done over and rehung.

paintings have been over and rehung.

The museum has gone into the making and showing of motion pictures relating to various phases of the fine arts. Twice a week these short films are shown publicly at the museum, and the subjects range from the making of a bronze statue to the "Daily Life of the Egyptians Ancient and Modern." Various special exhibitions have been held since the present art season began, with the finished article.

The regular series of symphony concerts is in progress on Saturday evenings during January and March, the January performances, as on several former occasions, being donated by John D. Rockefeller Jr. The huge lecture program undertaken by the museum is naturally one of its most important activities, and it is impossible to estimate the far-reaching effect of such an ambitious educational plan.

Scholastic theology has done much to hold mankind in mental and physical thraildom by perpetuating false concepts of God. Many, strictly schooled in the doctrines of the church, have long believed that the heavenly Father, if He does not actually send afflictions upon His chidren, at least permits these trials for the development, as they believe, of their characters!

Certainly not. God's purpose is being accomplished

Take, for example, Paul's words in the epistle to the Romans, "That ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," is interpreted in Science and Health (p. 17) as follows: "Enable us to know,—as in heaven, so on earth,—God is omnipotent, superceptable, and perfect, will of God." First, this will is declared to be this; but they are false witnesses, "good;" which is reassuring. But Paul and cannot testify correctly concerngoes farther: he says, secondly, that ing spiritual verities. The trath reit is "acceptable." A friend gives us vealed by Christian Science is that a present and we say, "This is very the perfect universe of God's creating there is nothing in the divine will to arouse apprehension and dread, but everything to encourage the most of this spiritual law becomes more and more apparent in the case of the individual and in the general social Multitudes are proving by practical experience that the will of God is "good, and acceptable, and perfect," and the world at large is witnessing the beneficent activity of this divine government in an ever increasing degree, and in numerous unmistakable signs which give promise of the glad day when "the kingdoms of this world" shall have "become the king-doms of our Lord, and of his Christ." Deddy all the way over to America?" Deddy looked at us queerly "You appear to think," he said. "that I am speaking of the impossible, but it is a fact that houses have been brought over to America from time to time from distant countries." We just couldn't say anything. We were almost too astonished to breathe.

Tick tock! Tick tock! Tick tock! said the clock. It sounded just as though it were nearly bursting to tell its something.

"How is Red Gables going to come, and who is going to bring it?" said Jo at last.

Then Daddy said, "It is about Red Gables."

Now Red Gables was a house, the most wonderful story-book house that had ever been built, and it was far, far away in England, quite near to where our cousins Betty and Oliver lived, on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean.

What could Daddy have to tell us about Red Gables that he had not already told us?

Dear Editor:

Will you answer this radio question for the smaller boys and girls?

"Daddy, how does one man's voice in a city go in all directions to cities from Portland to Los Angeles? Does he use something like the carbon paper you use on your typewriter—or, what?

cannot see the little waves, but they are going out to cities like Los Angeles and all around the country. A man speaks in the radio studio: His voice is then carried by an electric wire and "put on the air" as it is called. In other words the sound of his voice is made part of the station air "splashes" and when the waves go rippling outward his voice goes with them. These waves travel at the rate of 186,000 miles per second—or seven times around the world while the second hand on Daddy's watch moves once. Now your radio receiver is just like a cork which bobs up and down with the water waves, only of course the radio set feels the air waves. It picks the man's voice off of these waves, makes his voice loud and strong by electricity, and then you hear him just as though he was peaking in the same room.

The Coming Alumni-Their Intellectual Responsibility

the new attitude toward adult education, especially that of the alumni.

The period from 1800 to 1920 will doubtless stand out in collegiate history as that of the "rah-rah" alumnus. As college life became more and more dominated by businore and more dominated by business, social and athletic standards, and fewer and fewer graduates entered the more intellectually exacting professions, it naturally followed that alumni regarded the collowed the collowed the collowed the collow lege primarily in business, social and athletic terms. Colleges in turn, although they were insisting upon a certain amount of mental activity on the part of undergraduates, as-sumed no such attitude toward their alumni, but regarded them quite as the alumni regarded themselves. The alumni were appealed to for support; sentimental loyalty and price in the social and athletic prestige of the college prompted generous gifts. Such was the pre-vailing alumni attitude during those proud, prosperous years.

MONG all the changes going on today in American colleges, none is more significant than service. I look forward to the time when just as now only the service. when, just as now only those under-graduates who conform to the in-tellectual requirements of the college are allowed to remain, what-ever may be their talent and suc-cess in other respects, so alumni will be allowed voting privileges as members of the college community only on condition of giving satisfactory evidence of continued liberal in tellectual interests and achievement. I would have every alumnus name some field of study not immediately related to his vocational career, a pursue regular reading in it, under faculty supervision, with occasional reports, conferences and even examinations. Adventure Ever Unfolding

One used to hear that college wa preparation for life. No statement is less fair. College is life, of the very choicest, where men come to share the enterprise and the enthu siasms of the search for truth. And

But the primary purpose of the college is, I think, deeper than this. There is real affection for her sons concern that they shall continue to grow in the way which the college holds most important; and there is a strong sense of respon-sibility to the democratic society which the college tries to serve. If intelligence is to be so organized as to control our social develop-ment, the college cannot rest con-tent with finishing its education when boys are 21. It must educate them, not for life, but throughout human existence. When it can guar-

Hazlett of the University of Illinois, and Prof. Robert K. Root of Princeton. They give a comprehenthem, not for life, but throughout human existence. When it can guarantee that its graduates—even its "pass men," who are sent out after two years—are going to continue their liberal education, the college should be made competitive. The suggestion is, virtually, that admission to the junior class in any college should be made competitive. Passing College Students should make public announcement of the approximate number of students which it will admit each year to its freshman class. This number should be determined by a comprehensive survey of the equipment and resources of the college, present and prospective, and a decision in the sources of the college, present and prospective, and a decision in the light of that survey on the number of students which the institution can effectively teach. Procedure somewhat like this is, of course, already practiced by many colleges. The next action recommended by the commit-

Every care should be taken to prevent them from feeling that they have been sent away in disgrace. They should, for instance, have fell standing with their classmates in all organizations of alumni. The result, the committee hopes, will be this: that many boys and girls of no markedly intellectual bent, who now struggle through four years of academic work for which they are not really adapted, will decide voluntarily in advance to take only the two-year course. Open Competition

"Our existing practice of retention and promotion," the committee feels, essentially competitive though it be, lacks the element of incentive which comes from avowed and open com-petition. To the student the standard which he must attain seems to be a fixed one. He often calculates—not always with success—just how much, or how little, he must do in order to or now little, he must do in order to meet if. If he fails in a course, he often questions the justice of the verdict that has been passed against him. If he is 'dropped' for deficiencies, he leaves sometimes with a sense of injustice, usually with the feeling that he has been punished and dis-graced. But the student understands a competition, open and avowed, with no favors shown. It is the method on which he conducts the campus activi-ties which are under his own control. He works hard to win, but accepts defeat like a good loser. "The committee believes that the

HE education of women in the East End of London is being carried on primarily by dresslaking classes. The London County ouncil has recognized that when they were 60, 70, and 80 were happy to have made frocks for their grand-children. Three generations of several families were represented.

Educative to Be Dressed Up
The coats and frocks were all in the latest fashion, even to the nosegay in the fur collar of the coat. How educative it is to be dressed like other people, has become apparent in the East Ehd The girls no longer stare and laugh at a visitor from the West End, for she is no different from themselves; a sono different from themselves; a so-cial barrier has been broken down and the East End has gained in freeand the mast End has gained in free-dom. Even in the drill classes, it is the bostumes which tell of the de-velopment of the girls. The girls who do not trouble when they come at first even to wash their faces or at first even to wash their faces or tidy their hair, in a year's time have "gym dresses" and coiffures that might have been arranged in a hair-dressing saloh. own club become "ladylike" when brought in among the well-dressed students of the institute.

The effort to pian and make clothes with economy is having an effect both upon the women and their homes. Even the little woman with seven children and a husband out of work has a hopeful outlook. Has she not made since August four children's coats, two dresses, four hats, and a three-piece suit? She and her children can still hold up their heads in the neighborhood.

The teacher buys the material—job lines, materials that are a little out-of-date and odd pieces of velvet and fur—and the women pay a few pence each week to her

Shiny Leather Improves

A steady improvement is reported in the demand for shiny leather, particular attention being given to colors and novelties. The choicer grades of colors are listed at 52@50c. A selection, just one degree under the topmost, is available at 40@45c. A medium line, quoted at 32@38c, is in good demand, with the cheaper sort obtainable at 26@30c.

Top grades of black patent are quoted at 38@40c for both kips and sides. A grade offered at 34@36c is selling well. The medium selections are moving daily at 28@32c. A lot of prime thirds sold last week at 22@26c. Odd lots of plain blacks were booked at 17% @20c.

Odd lots of plain blacks were booked at 17% @20c.

The call for black combination tannages is quite active, the better grades seelling at 24@26c, with a good medium offered at 18@22c. Cheaper leather, all weights, is well sold up at 14@16c.

In fancy colored kid demand seems to have become fixed on rose blush, parchment, pastel and a fair call for pearl gray. Makers of low grade footwear are closely imitating the finer grades.

The cheaper run of black and colored kid, ranging in price from 16@20c and from 20@22c, is well sold up. Top selections of standard tannages, however, are both high and firm in price. The small, fine, extra assortment is quoted at 80-90c, with a fine black skin listed at 60-70.

Tanners report that the late demand from abroad for fancy and standard colors or blacks cleaned up a line of kid which has been slow of sale. The kid situation is, in broad way, satisfactory.

COTTON GINNINGS BELIEVED FRANCE IS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24 (P)—Cotton of the 1926 crop ginned prior to January 16 totaled 16,609,517 running bales, counting 611,052 round bales as half bales and excluding linters, the Census Bureau announced today.

Ginnings last year to that date were 15,499,893 running bales, including 336,998 round bales, and in 1925 the total was 13,306,813 bales, including 367,351 round bales.

The Department of Agriculture in its preliminary estimate of production based on Dec. 1 conditions placed the crop at 18,618,000 bales of 500 pounds gross weight, the largest crop ever raised. At that time a large amount of cotton still remained to be picked in view of the low price prevailing. Until the final government ginning report is issued by March 21 the exact size of the 1926 crop will remained doubtful.

The New York Rangers wop the second game of the National Hockey League series between the two New

The Rangers sprang a surprise on their opponents when William Cook secured the puck on the face-off, carried it down and passed it to his brother Fred, who scored a goal in nine seconds when Forbes slipped to the ice. No further scores came in this period, though at one time, two Americans were in the penalty box.

Abel started the second period in the penalty box, but as soon as he got out he began to show his finest work and after five minutes, starting from behind his own net, and going the entire length of the rink without losing the puck, scored the second Ranger goal. Then the even battle continued for the balance of the session.

The Americans made their best assaults in the first 10 minutes of thefinal period; but Chabot was strictly on his job and never let the puck pass.

The golfers, both men and Feb. 26. Nearly 200 persons have joined the golfing party, which is the first of its sort to visit Havana.

Maroons staged another of the series of strenuous contests that are the rule when these teams meet here on Saturday night and the locals added their seventeenth National Hockey League victory as a result of Frank Clancy's goal with eight minutes to play in the third period. Clancy secured near his goal and sped down the wing, knocking over two opposing checkers and hurdling the defense to score from close in.

Right from the start the tenseness between the players of both teams was seen and in the first period four players, two from each team, received match penalties and for the next 20 minutes the largest crowd of the season saw an exhibition of four-man hockey by both teams. This stopped the over-strenuous play until the last period when each team was reduced by a match penalty. The total of six for the game was the heaviest in the history of the league.

Outside of the two big outbreaks the teams provided great hockey and play ranged up and down the ics. Both teams made frequent changes in the players to maintain the speed and while the locals had a slight edge on the hour's play, the Marcons made a great attack in the closing minutes that forced the winners to the limit to stave off the tying goal. McGill Quintet in Fine Start

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 24 (Special)
—Canadiens won their fourth-straight National Hockey League game Saturday night by a fast attack in the first period which netted them four goals, and although St. Patricks of Toronto railied strongly, having the better of the play in the second period and an even break in the third, they were unable to beat Hainsworth, the final score being 4 to 9.

second, 40 seconds later, when he sebound from Mantha's shot and the second, 40 seconds later, when he sewhen Toronto made a great raily near the close.

In the first half the play was very even, the score being 14 to 13 for the locals, but in the second half McGill staked a pretty and very effective combination that for a while bewildered the opposing defense and the locals were leading by 26 to 17.

Toronto then railled, and by means of three field baskets in quick succession drew up to within three points, but the Red and White stiffened and held Toronto scoreless for the remaining minutes and added one single to make their total 27.

The losers tired during the second half, two games on successive nights having their effect. As a result of McGill's victory and Toronto's win at Kingston over Queen's University on Eridgy, the locals are leading.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 24—The victory of Yale University over Cornell University here Saturday in an Intercollegiate League basketball game, 21 to 20, marked the first win for an Eli quintet since the season of 1924.

Success for the Blue came in the last 30 seconds of the contest when Gilfry Ward '288, the Yale left forward, made a four throw and a basket. During the last period Cornell staged a brilliant rally which almost robbed the Elis of their narrow-margin victory.

PRAIRIE HOCKEY LEAGUE GAME MONDAY

SASKATOON, Sask., Jan. 24 (Spe

SASKATOON, Sask., Jan. 24 (Special)—The Saskatoon Shelks missed a chance to tie the Edmonton Eskimos for second place in the Prairie Hockey League pennant race by losing to that club in overtime here Saturday night by a score of 3 to 2. Morrison, left wing of the Edmonton Club, scored the winning goal in exactly 10 seconds after the start of the overtime period, poking the puck into the net on a pass from Harris. That fast goal marked the end of a game that produced little in the way of entertainment or excitement for the 1500 fans. The Shelks, playing their fifth game in seven days, turned in their poorest contest of the winter. They seemed worn and on the night's play Edmonton deserved the victory. The visitors played a sound defensive game that spelled defeat for the Shelks. The locals floundered before the stout three-man defense in front of Norman Fowler, former Boston Bruin's goal tender. The game should never had gone into overtime for Morrison scored a legitimate goal late in the third period for Edmonton to give the visitors the lead by 3 to 2; but Referee William Keane called the play offside. The -victory strengthened Edmonton's hold on second place in the league standing with Calgary Tigers still well out in the lead. The summary:

CROSS WINS U. S. "C" SQUASH TENNIS TITLE

NEW YORK, Jan. 24—Harry K. Cross of the Yale Club is now the United States Class C squash tennis champion. The former Yale athletic star clinched the title on Saturday, when he defeated his clubmate, John S. Davidson, in a four-game battle at the Interfraternity Club, in the final round, by a score of 12—15, 16—3, 15—6, 15—9.

Cross is one of the most powerful players that has ever played the game, and his greater endurance after one of the hardest weeks of play ever indulged in by two squash tennis players proved to be the deciding factor in the result. Both players have competed during the past week not only in this tourney, completeing five rounds each, but also played in the Yale Club invitation tourney against Class A stars, and represented Yale Club successfully in Class C and Class B team matches in the intervals. Davidson showed better skill in the use of his racquet, but the slamming tactics of Cross gradually wore down his resistance, and the later games were one-sided. Both are regarded as strong contenders for the Class B championship, as their work in the higher class team matches indicates that few players will be able to meet their varied play. The summary:

AMERICAN HOCKEY ASSOCIATION GAME MONDAY

CHICAGO, Jan. 24—In the second game of the series with the Duluth Hornets, the Chicago Cardinals won by a score of 1 to 0 at the Coliseum there last night. They tied the first game of the series, 2 to 2, on Friday. The lone goal was scored after four minutes of play in the first period when Burns, left wing, passed to Wentworth, left defense, who shot it past Turner, Duluth goal tender.

Chicago showered shots on Turner all evening, the visiting goalie being forced to make 38 stops against 19 for Fisher of the locals. The Cardinal defense was so tight in the second period that the Hornets were forced to shoot from mid-ice; their efforts carried wild, however, and Fisher came into contact with the puck only six times during the period. SCOTLAND WINS RUGBY GAME 23-6

Defeats France in Their International Contest at Edinburgh

LONDON, Jan. 24—Scotland, winner of the international Rugby football championship two seasons ago and joint holder with Ireland of top place in the final standing last year, opened its 1927 program with a victory over France at Edinburgh, Saturday, 23 points to 6 (four goals and a penalty goal to two tries. At first it looked as if the match were going to be a revival of one of the farces so often seen when France was young at the game, for the Scotish forwards secured the ball from almost every scrummage and were able to set going an array of backs who cut incisively through the visitors' defense time after time. After the interval, however, the Frenchmen arose splendidly to the occasion. Instead of interval, however, the Frenchmen arose splendidly to the occasion. Instead of being overwhelmed, they pushed the Scottish forwards off the ball and enabled M. Bader, scrum half, to sling out rapid passes to that brilliant flyhalf, Yves Du Manoir. There, unfortunately for the Frenchmen, their effectiveness in attack almost came to an end owing to a lack of speed in the three-quarter line.

If the Scotsmen had been less effident in tackling, they would certainly have lost most of the 17-point cient in tackling, they would certainly have lost most of the 17-point lead they enjoyed at half-time and probably would have been hard put to avoid defeat. This is in no way derogatory to the Scottish fifteen, which, reinforced by the return of the former Oxford University captain, G. P. S. MacPherson, is thought to be stronger than last, year.

That the selectors were not disappointed with Saturday's showing is clear from the fact that they have made only one alteration in side for match against Dales at Cardiff Feb. 5. Whilst its three-quarter line was relatively poor, France's pack of forwards played heroically. After the first half hour they let themselves go in tremendous fashion. They were speedier than their opponents in the loose, more powerful in the scrummages and generally quicker to seize opportunities. An outstanding feature of the match was the superb kicking of A. C. Gillies who converted three tries and scored a penalty goal. Scotland has now won eight in the series of 12 matches, three of which have gone to France. The summary:

SINGLE WAVE CHAIN CONTROL WORKED OUT

Iowa Engineer Claims to Have Solution of New Problem

In view of the discussion on simultaneous radiocastiny by chain stations on the same wavelength, which took place at the recent convention of radio engineers in New York, the following paper is quite timely. As pointed out at that time, however, the value of this method will not be apparent until the same group of stations carry the same chain program throughout the day.

Carl Menser, radio engineer of WSUI, the radiocasting station of the University of Iowa at Iowa City has invented a system of synchronized frequency control, which, he believes, will make radiocasting of chain programs on the same wavelength a relatively simple matter. Mr. Menser's application for latters patent is now on file at the patent

At the present stage of the chain radiocasting art, the listener-in may pick up the master station's program from any one of a long list of sub-scribing stations. He does not, how-ever, find them operating on the same wavelength, an arrangement which seems to commend itself for maich seems to commend itself for apparent reasons.

The technical obstacles to the use of identical frequencies in a radiocast chain have previously never been overcome. At first glance it would appear to be a simple matter to regulate a chain of stations to the same wavelength. There are, however, so many uncontrollable to regulate a chain of stations to the same wavelength. There are, however, so many uncontrollable factors involved in the independent tuning of a chain of stations, that it has been found impossible to attain perfect synchronism.

When an attempt is made to tune a number of stations independently to the same frequency, the variations which inevitably creep in between the frequencies of the different units of the chain are not large; but they are within the band of audio frequency and resultants are produced which give rise to disagreeable whistling sounds in the receivers. For this reason, chain radiocasting at a common frequency has heretofore never been achieved.

The accompanying diagram gives a general outline of the Monzer system. The layout of only one chain station is shown, the arrangement at all subscribing stations being identical. As is well known, the master station's program is carried to the chain members over the long distance telephone lines. The line in the drawing marked "Telephone Lines" stands for the equipment used by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in carrying the program to the subscribing stations. It represents lines, electron tube telephone repeaters, switchboards, etc.

The circle at the master station marked "Frequency Control" represents apparatus to generate a control frequency which is sent out to marked "Frequency Control" represents apparatus to generate a control frequency which is sent out to all chain stations simultaneously. This frequency may be at any desired rate up to about 30,000 cycles, which is the maximum used in long distance wire communication.

If the rate fixed is above audio frequency, it would be possible to use the same long distance wire circuit for transmitting both the program itself (coming from the circle marked "Speech Control") and the control frequency. Otherwise two circuits would be required. It is the control frequency, being sent out to all the chain stations at once, assignment of a little chain stations at once, assignment of the control of the c it is possible that the control frequency in passing through innumerable electron tube telephone repeaters, might suffer a shift in phase before reaching all stations. In that event a phase shifter would have to be added to the chain station equip-

The advantages which would arise from the operation of such a system are at once manifest. On occasions when a large number of stations

Upon striking a chain station, the control frequency passes through as alter, through amplification, and to a harmonic generator.

Assuming that the control frequency were 30,000 cycles and that the harmonic generator were generating at the tenth harmonic, the frequency were 30,000 cycles and that the harmonic generator were generating at the tenth harmonic, the frequency passing to all transmitters in the chain would be 300,000 cycles. It is at once evident that any fracture of the corresponding length in the chain would be 300,000 cycles. It is at once evident that any fracture of the corresponding length in the control frequency desired could be produced for transmission by variation in the barmonic employed.

By the method described, Mr.

Menser achieves perfect synchronism of their products of about 1,000,000 sets within the next few years.

It is said in Canada, however, that he popularity of the radio will be maintained.

It is possible that the control frequency in passing through innumerable electron tube telephone repeaters, might suffer a shift in phase before reaching all stations. In that event a phase shifter would have to exceed the corresponding to the corresponding length that the control frequency in passing that the control frequency in passing the control frequency in the frequency

The advantages which would arise from the operation of such a system are at once manifest. On occasions when a large number of stations were radiocasting the same program, their regular wavelengths could be assigned to non-participating stations. These stations could well be the ones whose wavelengths were readiocasting stations could well be the ones whose wavelengths were the closest to that employed by the chain, thus giving the chain stations a band which would have an appreciable amount of free ether on either side of it, which would serve to reduce interference.

Melbourne University Gets Fund From Radiocaster

MELBOURNE, Australia - Wireless research is the latest activity to be embraced by Melbourne University, and it has become possible through the enterprise of the Broadthrough the enterprise of the Broadcasting Company of Australia Pty.,
Ltd., operators of the Melbourne Station 3LO. The company offered the university £500 ($£500) a year for three years to take up this work, and the offer was accepted, a condition being that although the result of the investigations to be made would be made available to the radiocasting company in the first instance, the university authorities should otherwise be free to use them. Another stipulation was that the problems chosen for investigation should be such as were likely to lead to original natural scientific results.

This is the first attempt made in Australia to conduct an extended and original series of researches into wireless problems. The results oband original series of researches into wireless problems. The results obtained are likely to be of very great importance because the subjects for investigation will be the problems associated with fading and other matters which have been causing much trouble to radio listeners in Australia, particularly in the country districts. The research work will be conducted by the faculty of natural science, and the man selected will be engaged solely on that work will be engaged solely on that work for the period covered by the sub-sidy. It is likely to be about a year before any definite results are an

Work will be begun on lines already adopted for similar work overseas, and the experiments will be designed with special regard to the modified theory which postulates the modified theory which postulates the existence of a reflecting layer above the surface of the earth. One of the first works to be completed will be to ascertain whether general results obtainable in Australia are similar to those which have been obtained overseas. If it be found that any exceptional circumstances exist here, these will be the subject for later study. From the verification of general results the work will proceed to measurements of the height above the earth of the reflecting layer, with special observations on diurnal and seasonal variations in height.

After the ground covered in other

After the ground covered in other countries has been checked a series of original experiments will be be-gun. Observations are to be confined practically to radiocast wavelengths as the signals from the various sta-tions afford a splendid medium on which to make them.

BAGON AND EGG

Newcastle (Ind.) Courier: All the agricultural wors are not confined to the United States. In the tight little island, the British Ministry of Agriculture has been solemnly sitting on the state of the British egg, and has issued a fat printed report of the same. The traditional English dish of bacon and eggs is apparently English only in name. The bacon comes from the United States, and the eggs from all parts of the world. The alien egg, according to the report, has driven out the product of the native British hen. The Latvian, the Esthonian, the Norwegian and the Irish egg, together with the Danish, the German, and the Polish egg have caught the British taste. Twenty million pounds sterling a year are being spent on alien eggs, and the Ministry makes the formal recommendation that the English agriculturalist give himself over seriously to raising British hens that will lay British eggs. Meanwhile by a little order in council, they intend to boost the rates to make the entry of the alien egg a little harder, and its cost a little higher to the British consumer. .* + +

The League of Nations has now committed tself by a resolution passed by the Assembly

The League and Alcohol

last September to consider various aspects of the problem of alcohol. Hence temperance agencies in Europe are busy preparing the necessary data so that the delegates shall be in possession of as many facts as possible when the subject comes up for consideration again at the next meeting of the Assembly.

The resolution of last September was due to the joint work of Sweden, Finland and Poland. These three states collectively brought forward a memorandum in which they pointed out that several of the League humanitarian committees had come to the conclusion that "an interde-pendence existed" between alcoholism and the protection of women and children. They also alluded to the question of smuggling, to "the conflicts between alcohol exporting states and states with advanced alcohol legislation," and to the question of liquor in mandated territories. In conclusion, the three signatories requested "that the Assembly should decide to include in the program of work of the League of Nations the question of alcoholism and should ask the Council to take measures to this effect."

The question of alcohol in mandated territories is one which had already been receiving the attention of the League's Mandates Commission, this commission having registered certain complaints with regard to the import and consumption of liquor in these areas, as well as to the lack of clearly defined terms and of uniform methods in this respect. The Mandates Commission's interest in the subject hinges on a phrase in Article 22 of the League Covenant, whereby the mandatory power is told that it "must be responsible for the administration of the territory under conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience and religion, subject only to . . . the prohibition of abuses such as the slave trade, the arms traffic and the liquor

When the terms of the actual mandates granted under Article 22 came to be drawn up, this very definite prohibition was modified. In the Class B mandates which were granted in respect of Central Africa, the phraseology becomes, "shall suppress all forms of the slave trade . . . shall exercise a strict control over the traffic in arms and ammunition, and the sale of spirituous liquors." Only in the Class C mandates-Southwest Africa and the South Pacific group-is it stated that "the supply of intoxicating spirits and beverages to the natives shall

It is to be noted, however, that in Southwest Africa, a "C" mandated area where the supply of intoxicants to natives is consequently supposed to be prohibited, there is not only a big importation of such liquors, but a considerable amount is also manufactured locally.

At a meeting of the International Federation for the Protection of Native Races Against Alcoholism, held at Lausanne in 1921, it was decided to press for total prohibition of alcohol in mandated areas in accordance with the League Covenant, as well as for the substitution of the term, "distilled liquors," for "trade spirits." and these points are to be strongly urged on the League Assembly when it discusses the matter next September. The objection to the term, "trade spirits," is that, as no one knows what it means, it is consequently easy to evade the

It is noted in Europe that the United States has more than an academic interest in the discussion which is to take place on this subject. as well as in the smuggling aspect of the alcohol problem. It is true that it is not a member of the League, but its own dry legislation implies an interest in any anti-alcoholic activities. Furthermore, the United States has entered (or is likely in due course to enter) into separate treaties with each of the mandatory powers in respect of each individual mandated area. In spite of America's prohibition stand, the treaties signed with Great Britain in respect of the latter's mandates for the Cameroons, Tanganyika and Togoland did not reflect the terms of Article 22 of the Covenant, but reiterated in identical terms the phraseology of the mandates, namely, that the mandatory power 'shall exercise a strict control . . . over the sale of spirituous liquors."

Strangely enough, the result of the United States' action in this respect has in one way been to make it more difficult for any change to be introduced in these areas, for the terms of the mandate cannot be varied "unless such modification shall have been assented to by the United States." On the other hand, the United States, by virtue of these treaties, has an undoubted right to interest itself in the mandated areas, and temperance advocates in Europe therefore hope that this right will receive practical expression when the subject of alcohol comes before the League next September.

The seven years which have elapsed since the passage by the United States Congress of the Transportation Act of 1920, in which amendments were made to existing statutes, authorizing railway consolidations, have not been fruitful of the results anticipated. The reason is not far to seek, as railroad managers are aware that, regardless of the opinions of economists and enthusiasts to the contrary, making large companies larger does not necessarily reduce the costs of doing business. Indeed, in the case of railroads, the establishment of super-roads is likely to increase, rather than reduce, the overhead costs.

Wages, supplies, taxes and interest on the investment constitute the greater part of the cost of operating railroads. None of these would be in the slightest affected by the merging of two or more railroads. While those who have favored the bringing together of various roads into a small group of strong carriers declare, in support of their contention, that freight may thus be dispatched by shorter routes, that a greater standardization of equipment may be attained, that a partial elimination of competitive switching at large city terminals can be achieved, and the cost of maintaining "off-line" soliciting offices be reduced, it is a fact that none of these items include the major expenses of operation. Indeed, if all of the economies thus mentioned were brought about, the effect on the operating ratio of the railways as a whole would

The legislation permitting consolidations states explicitly that permission to merge shall be granted by the Interstate Commerce Commis-sion if it "finds that the public interest will be promoted" thereby. The principal public interest in rail mergers may be said, in general, to be centered in lower rates and satisfactory service. Inasmuch as the railroads, as at present constituted, are providing an efficient public service, the sole remaining public interest to be promoted lies in reduced charges.

In the several consolidations which have been proposed-notably the Van Sweringens' Nickel Plate combination; the ambitious Loree project in the Southwest, and the more recently promulgated consolidation of the Hill roads in the Northwest-one may search the published opinions of interested parties diligently without finding any definite forecasts that rates will be materially reduced. Indeed, on this point, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission last year, Joseph B. Eastman, told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee that the prospects of lower rates in rail mergers had been greatly exaggerated by the public, adding: "The country ought not to be led into the belief that great consolidations of railroad properties involve any probability that the general level of freight rates may thereby be substantially reduced." Although the backers of the present mergers have carefully refrained from forecasting lower charges as a result of the combinations, public opinion apparently has been led to believe that in consolidations lies a promise of reduced rates.

Aside from the effect of such mergers on public service and costs for transportation, the situation of the less prosperous roads in sections where mergers are proposed must be considered. Likewise, the position of the short lines cannot be overlooked. Inasmuch as the latter are not generally in a prosperous situation, they have been "left out in the cold" in the plans of great companies to merge. L. F. Loree, in fact, when urging his southwestern railroad system, quite frankly stated that many of these short lines should be scrapped anyway, although it is well known that a number of them serve a useful function for the patrons living along their

It has been said that it is in the terminals that the greatest chance for railroad economies lie. The unification of such parts of the properties as would effect this, without merging entire rail systems, not only is permissible, but may be required by the Commerce Commission, if it decides that such a step would be in the public interest. In view of the warnings against the establishment of large railroads (in which personal ambition on the part of manipulators may play a large part) issued by eminent authorities, there is reason carefully to consider the consolidations now proposed. It is easier to avoid difficulties oftentimes than to undo what has been definitely done.

Largely, no doubt, because of the discussions which have taken place in New York over the relative merits of the Baumes Law, so called, under which mandatory direction is given to trial judges to impose a life sentence in every case where a person stands convicted for the fourth time of an offense punishable by imprisonment in a state penitentiary, similar legislation has been proposed elsewhere. In Massachusetts such a bill has been introduced at the request of the prosecuting attorney of Middlesex County, which lies beyond the Charles River north of Boston and includes the city of Cambridge. The passage of this measure is opposed by the newly installed Attorney-General, his immediate predecessor in office.

The purpose of the law, as it is conceived to be by those instrumental in its passage by the New York Legislature, is to discourage habitual offenders who have served sentences from continually defying the law. The theory of the act, defined by the commission which sponsored it after a survey of conditions in New York prisons, is that those who stand convicted for the fourth time are presumed not to be responsive to the so-called reformatory efforts which the prisons provide, and hence they then should be regarded as confirmed criminais who have forfeited their right ever again to mingle with society.

But, as has been previously indicated, some of the judges who have been called upon to pass sentences in obedience to this mandatory direction of the statute have demurred, claiming that the act robs them of their discretionary power and pretends to make of them merely the ministerial officers of the Legislature. One trial judge, apparently facing the necessity of carrying out the plain direction of the law, it having been made to appear that a person sentenced to a shorter term was liable to the heavier penalty because his offense was the fourth of which he had been convicted, is reported to have resorted to the subterfuge of submitting the question of this liability to a jury impaneled to determine whether or not the prisoner had in fact served all or parts of three previous sentences. As might have been expected, the jury, acting upon the theory of reasonable doubt and giving the prisoner the benefit thereof, found that the fact had not been clearly established that the prisoner was a fourth offender. Upon the strength of this verdict the court decided that the previous sentence imposed by it should stand. In view of this it would be interesting to know if the learned trial judge has at any time entertained the slightest doubt, not to say a reasonable doubt, as to the actual status of the prisoner in respect to his previous record in prison. The fact, it would seem, should be the easiest possible one to establish from prison records. In this particular case, it appears, witnesses testified that he had been seen at three different periods in the yards of state prisons, but they disclaimed actual knowledge as to his status.

The presumption of a lack of sympathy with the law could not possibly be raised in a case where a trial judge had not expressed a desire to evade the responsibility which the law seeks to impose. But in any event the evasion of that responsibility should not, it is believed, be predicated upon a state of facts which raises a questionable doubt in the thoughts of the public. The question of fact submitted to the jury in the New York case is hardly an issuable one. The prison records should be the best evidence, supplying convincing prima facie proof which should not be offset by the testimony of even a multitude of witnesses called to state that they had no actual knowledge of the facts.

tractors was an occasion fitting to the launching of aviation upon a year for which the highest hopes are entertained. Like all young industries, aeronautics has had its momentary booms and temporary lulls, and as a result of these up-and-down periods the industry is emerging as an organization built up, not upon the artificial stimulus of war, but upon the firm foundation of sound judgment which comes only from an effort to provide a real service for the welfare of mankind upon an economic basis.

The year 1926 brought forth the first signs of the prosperity ahead, serving, as it were, as a preparation period. Congress took its first serious steps in recognizing the importance of aviation development to the Nation. Consideration was given to adequate air defense, a subject of justifiable significance, and, what is of far greater import, Washington, in creating the aeronautics branch in the Department of Commerce, opened the way to the development of commercial aviation along sound financial lines.

Undue optimism is merely misleading. It took many years for the gigantic railroad system of the United States to reach its present state. The automobile has not sprung into universal popularity in a night. And so aviation, with due respect for the experiences of its forerunners in mechanical civilization, should only be expected to make normal progressive development. Resultant upon the abnormal growth of the war period, aeronautics has lent itself to the stretch of the imagination and its enthusiasts have frequently permitted their thoughts to run wild on its immediate possibilities. There is, however, real reason for expectancy in the coming year, for the past few months have seen the entry into the aviation field of some of the most stable financial and transportation authorities in the United States-individuals whose sole object it is to make commercial aviation an economic success. It is the several organizations which have this sound business foundation that are now bidding for the contracts to operate, in sections, the New York-San Francisco air mail

Under the competitive stimulus of private operation, this service, together with the sixteen other contract air mail routes in the country, will, with little doubt, grow into one of the mainstays of American business, just as the railroad system is today. Yet these air services cannot pay their way on the carriage of mail alone. Postmaster-General New, together with some of the Nation's leading transportation authorities, has expressed this belief on numerous occasions. and there is every indication of regular passenger service by air being available upon an established basis during the coming twelve months.

The slow growth of commercial aviation in the United States has frequently been depl Activities of the past few months, however, have indicated that America is rapidly coming to the fore in the civil employment of aircraft, and there is little doubt that the present year will see the inauguration on a large scale of genuine commercial aviation, living upon its own earnings and providing a safe, sound and reliable service to the Nation's business and social welfare.

Editorial Notes

Eighty-five years is a comfortable measure of service, and the Cleveland Plain Dealer is justified in feeling a certain degree of pride in having completed that length of time "as the fearless advocate of truth, of liberty in faith, liberty in government, liberty in trade." It is recorded that the greatest single incident in the story of these years was the purchase of the Cleveland Herald in 1885 and the emergence of the Plain Dealer as a morning paper. Its first number expressed the wish to "succeed to the Herald's place in the esteem and affections of its readers," and it promised "to endeavor to do so by pursuing the same course of fairness, candor, and honest regard for the public interests, as it understands them, that won for the Herald the esteem of its friends and the respect of its op-' Thus it typified at that time the new journalistic ideals that were transforming the American press. And today the Plain Dealer is still recognized as a daily publication filling a place in the first rank of newspapers.

A young Canadian recently won a swimming contest and $25,000 under severe handicaps, and at once said he would do nothing about spending the money until he had talked with his mother. He was a Mother's boy, he said, and proud of it. One thing he would do: make all the money he could at once and then resume his schooling. The donor of the $25,000 prize, a large manufacturer, has taken an interest in the young man and is advising him about his financial affairs. Prior to the contest this young man had signed a contract with a manager guaranteeing 40 per cent of all his earnings. This manager, another Canadian, by the way, now says he will lay no claim to the prize money, leaving that intact for the winner of it. Sir Edward Kemp, wartime Minister of Militia for Canada, has contributed $5000 as a base for a fund to build a home for the young man and his mother. This is a mere recital of events to stress a whole-someness in sports that is refreshing.

The Diary of a Political Pilgrim

FROM A LONDON CORRESPONDENT IN PRETORIA

over South Africa since the Union of 1909 has been the political predominance of the North over the South. In the old days Cape Colony was the nursery of the principal leaders. Cecil Rhodes, Jan Hofmeyr, Merriman, Jameson, W. P. Schreiner and so on among the politi-cians; De Villiers, Rose Innes, and the Solomons among the lawyers, were all of Cape Colony training. Today, though the Cape Bar is still strong upon the bench, be-cause judges remain in harness so much longer than most,

the North is the real power.

The old leaders of Cape Colony seem to have sensed the danger. "Onze Jan" Hofmeyr was a very doubtful supporter of Union, while the Cape Colony Parliament under the leadership of Merriman and Sauer did their best to amend the draft constitution in Cape Colony's favor and only accepted it as a lesser evil than rejection.

And from the Cape Colony point of view they were right.

In politics it is Pretoria and Bloemfontein as in economics it is Johannesburg, rather than Cape Town, which nowa-

The capitals of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State have developed even more rapidly in the last twenty years than Cape Town itself. Pretoria in particular, with the magnificent Union Buildings designed by Sir Herbert Baker and its roads and avenues lined with jacaranda trees planted by an enterprising municipality, is fast be-coming one of the most beautiful cities in the world.

The predominance of the North since the Union may account for the course which politics has followed in the last fifteen years. In an earlier article I said that the Act of Union was passed on a wave of enthusiasm for racial co-operation and for wiping out the recriminations of the past, but that later events had somewhat belied these rosy expectations.

After the Union had come into force racialism began to raise its head once more. What happened was this: General Botha; then easily the outstanding political figure in South Africa, had been urged to form a national minis-try of both races and all parties with which to start the Union. He refused, an action which the light of after events showed was justified, and formed his ministry mainly out of the Dutch parties in the four old colonies. But though he refused a coalition ministry he pursued a policy of reconciliation between the two white races, and of co-operation with Great Britain.

There seems to be little doubt that he went too fast for some of his old supporters. General Botha and General Smute had been working with British colleagues for many years. They had been to London and had come to understand secretary secretary. stand something of the complexities of the outside world. They realized that the vast and looming native problem only be solved as a result of agreement and cooperation between British and Dutch on a just and far-sighted policy. The Cape Colonists, too, had been accusomed to the British connection for more than a hundred

But the old Dutch farmers of the backveld and the more ardent racial representatives of the old republics, many of whom had fought for the independence of their countries for three long years, could not forget so easily. They were not prepared to accept membership of the British Empire on the lines of the Act of Union as a final solution of South Africa's destiny and they felt strongly the prior claim of the British to dominate the land.

Very likely they did not understand that the old dom-inance of South Africa by Great Britain had been ended by the Act of Union, while the new concept of a comnonwealth of equal nations, now familiar to all, was to them an unmeaning term.

First, General Hertzog, partly as a result of pressure from Natal, the most British section of the Union, was dropped out of the Cabinet on account of the secessionist character of his speeches. He set to work to form the Nationalist Party on the basis that the Dutch and British sections of the people must be kept distinct and that it would work for the eventual separation of South Africa from the Empire by constitutional means.

The Boer rebellion on the outbreak of the World War, put down promptly and firmly by General Botha, only served to drive many of those who felt most keenly con-cerning the racial question in Cape Colony, as well as

DERHAPS the most striking change which has come | in the North, into its ranks, as did the growing identification of the Botha-Smuts Government with British policy in Europe and elsewhere.

Then, soon after the war, came the passing on of General Botha and the break-up of the Botha-Smuts partnership which had been the real strength of the Government ever since the Union. General Smuts found himself unable to maintain a government with the old South African Party alone, and effected a fusion with the Unionist or British Party.

This gave him a safe majority for a time, but drove still more of his Dutch followers over to the Nationalists. Finally, the Nationalists made a "pact" with the Labor Party on the basis that they would make no effort to bring about secession during the ensuing Parliament, and at the elections of 1924 General Hertzog and his Nationalst colleagues came into power.

Since that date political strife has run fairly high. On the one hand the Nationalists have been accused of endanthe one hand the Nationalists have been accused of endanting gering the economic future of the country by pandering to the demands of their Socialist allies, especially by artificially heightening wages and by taking on expensive "poor white" labor on the railways in place of inexpensive native labor. On the other hand, they have been accused of preparing the way for secession by removing as many emblems of the British connection as possible and by insisting to an excessive extent on the bilingual and by insisting to an excessive extent on the bilingual provisions of the Constitution, both in education and for the public service.

The controversy came to a head over the notor Flag Bill. South Africa, like Canada, Australia, or New Zealand, naturally wants a distinctive flag of its own. The normal course would seem to be to combine the emblems which represent the historic associations of both races. The South African Party proposed that the South African flag should be the old Transvaal Vierkleur with the Union Jack in the top corner, on the model of the

But the extremer sections of the Nationalist Party would not agree. The old bitterness of the war era surged to the top, and General-Hertzog and Dr. Malan declared that the Vierkleur had been buried at the end of the Boer War, that the Union Jack was the flag of hated oppression, and that the new South African flag must contain neither.

This declaration produced a tremendous stir among the contain neither.

This declaration produced a tremendous stir among the British section. It was taken as proving the intention of the Nationalists to secede from the British Empire, and General Hertzog went off to attend the Imperial Conference with racial feeling higher than it had been since the first elections after the Boer War.

Then came the announcement of the conclusions of the Imperial Conference in the middle of November and General Hertzog's declaration that he was perfectly satisfied with South Africa's new status within the British Commonwealth of Nations. This declaration was followed by similar statements by the other leaders of the Nationalist Party that the secession issue was a past issue because South Africa now had that "sovereign independence" within the Commonwealth which they had always sought. The effect of the acceptance by the Nationalist Party of membership in the British Commonwealth and of the abandonment of the policy of secession is likely to have far-reaching effects on the political alignment of parties in South Africa, for the issue which originally caused the split between General Botha and General Hertzog now disappears. There does not seem to be much difference between the "status" of South Africa today and that which was accepted by General Botha and General Smuts after the Great War.

But whatever the difference may be, it seems clear that the settlement of the relations between South Africa and

But whatever the difference may be, it seems clear that But whatever the difference may be, it seems clear that the settlement of the relations between South Africa and Great Britain, which was not fully effected by the Act of Union, is now complete, and, what is perhaps more important, is now understood by all. That is a great advance. For the reconciliation between Briton and Dutch in South Africa, the necessary condition of the growth of a true and vigorous South African nationality, and of a sound treatment of the native problem, is only possible on the basis of the agreeing about their relations with the other nations of the British world. What will happen about the Flag Bill remains to be seen.

The Week in Geneva

ARE the Swiss, like the Scots, becoming more and more A lowland people; that is to say, are they leaving the mountain villages for an easier and more profitable existence in the valleys and plains? The Highlanders of Scotland were often evicted to make room for deer forests. But no one wants to turn the Swiss out from their mountain valleys. In an interesting discussion which took place on this question at a gathering of the new Helvetia Club at Zurich, various reasons were given for the desertion of the Swiss highlands. It was said to be due to the decline of forestry owing to the importation of cheaper wood from abroad, to the difficulty of applying modern methods of agriculture to the steep fields around the mountain villages, and to the decay of the wood carving industry, owing to the competition of machine-made toys, while Frau Glattli suggested that young people could not stand the dullness of the life. She said that the hold of Calvinism was still so strong in some of the mountain districts that the girls were forbidden to associate at all intimately with the boys, or to take part in winter sports with them. It was not surprising, therefore, that the young people should seize the first opportunity of escape by accepting positions in the hotels, and thence finding their

Since the hardy character of the Swiss people comes from their struggle with nature in the mountain villages, from their struggle with nature in the mountain villages, it is not surprising that the Swiss professors who gathered in the Helvetia Club at Zurich should have deplored the good old times when the young men and maidens were content with the music of the cowbells in the upland pastures. Can anything be done to keep them there? What the peasants need is occupation in the long winter evenings which would add something to their earnings. In some districts they have taken to the plaiting of straw hats for export to America. But the Japanese have come hats for export to America. But the Japanese have come into this market and sent 80,000 dozen straw hats to the into this market and sent 80,000 dozen straw hats to the United States last year at a cheaper price than the Swiss could make them. So the villagers are turning to the weaving of wool and hemp, to the making of boots, baskets and purses, while there is talk of reviving the carpet industry, which a hundred years ago flourished in the Bernese Oberland. The winter sports, of course, afford opportunities of employment to the young people in many of the mountain villages, but they have also the effect of increasing the restlesness among the younger generation, who are brought into contact with a world of new ideas and find it difficult to accommodate themselves to the monotonous work of the fields when spring and summer come.

There is an excellent society for the protection of birds in Switzerland which has its headquarters at Berne, and the Swiss have an enviable reputation for their kindness to birds. It is not always easy to persuade the peasants that birds, with few exceptions, are their friends, and that if they occasionally take toll of fruit, the caterpillars and grubs which they eat would take still more. Fortunately, an experience in the Frickthal, a valley famous for its cherry orchards, has at least converted the peasants there to the wisdom of protecting the birds. The cherry trees

There was one district, however, in the valley in which the trees flourished and bore plenty-of fruit, and it was in this district that the birds had received special protection and encouragement for some years past. The tomtits in particular played their part so well in eating the grubs that the fashion of putting up nesting boxes for them is spreading to other fruit-grow

What the Wets Really Want

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

It is pure humbug for most of the wets to talk about states' rights or majority rule. The referendum in Missouri went against the wets, but Senator Reed of Missouri is just as strong as ever for repeal. In Colorado, too, where the referendum went in favor of the drys, the wets are as law-defiant as ever.

Two years ago, on an unusually full vote, Massachusetts carried the so-called "Baby Volstead Act"; but were the Massachusetts wets any more willing to have the law enforced because in their own State the majority had voted for enforcement? Not a bit.

What most of the wets really want is neither states' rights nor majority rule; they want liquor; and they are willing to override both states' rights and majority rule in order to get it.
